In The First Frost. j am really beginning to believe that there is such a thing in this world of disappointment as luck. My good friend Red Spinner has told me for many years past he considered me to be one of the luckiest men he knew. He has often and often enumerated a long list of circumstances which have contributed to that belief, but he always winds up by saying, and your angling luck is perfectly exasperating. What has somewhat converted me to his way of thinking is the series of adverse circumstances which always attend him when he goes a-fishing. If, for instance, he journeys from London to Yorkshire for a turn at the grayling, as soon as ever he sets foot in the county the heavens open and a flood is a certainty. When he goes to...
