Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1864 edition. Excerpt: . . . T. Hall, whose writings are known far and wide, and whose name is familiar to the readers of the Reliquary, by literary contributions to its first volume, has recently issued a new work--a companion volume to his The Peak and the Plain--on Derbyshire, and the picturesque beauties with which it so completely abounds. Few people are imbued with a keener perception of the beautiful in nature than is Dr. Hall, and fewer still possess the power of painting that scenery in words which is possessed in so eminent a degree by him. He is a dear lover of nature, reveling in its enjoyment, and he has the happy knack of imparting that enjoyment to his readers. His present volume, unlike his former ones, aims at being a kind of guide-book for the use of the tourist, and he has therefore divided it into little districts, in each of which he supposes himself and his companions to spend their days; and he contrives, while imparting information in a chatty and agreeable manner, to throw into his descriptions sufficient anecdotal leaven to lighten up the hours, which perhaps might otherwise have a tendency, with some people, to pass wearily. The volume opens with A day at Crich, which is followed by a delightful sketch, entitled Going to Matlock, in which Dufneld, Belper, and other places are described en route. Matlock Bath, with its neighbourhood, is pleasantly described, and Stonnis, Bonsall, and all the favourite spots which...
