In three bounds I climbed to a high limb on the cypress tree, crouched on the branch, ears pricked. Far away I picked up the cries of the man who tried to ruin me. Let him come. I d crush his skull between sharp teeth and strong jaws. For the jaguar and me were one. Rain thrashed ground. Lightning cut sky. Thunder boomed. The moon burst open and anointed me with its life . . . its glory . . . its power. In the natural beauty of raw wildness, encircled by God s light and supremacy, I stood reborn. Baptized by the pureness of rain and earth, wind and fire into the Church of the Howling Moon. From time to time--when the need is great, when injustice can no longer be tolerated, when the very heavens cry Enough! --a champion is born. Even though she doesn t know...
